The first officially announced collection of a design couple: ANDREAS KRONTHALER FOR VIVIENNE WESTWOOD F/W 16-17.

The show of a new-labeled brand was called Sexercise, in which Andreas Kronthaler, Vivienne Westwood's colleague and husband, mixed punk aesthetics with religious motifs.

Starting from the Fall / Winter 2016-17 collection, held in Paris on March 5th and called “Sexercise”, the brand Vivienne Westwood Gold Label switched its name to Andreas Kronthaler for Vivienne Westwood. The first collection after the transformation of the brand’s name Kronthaler called “Sexercise”. It was not about sex though but about the erasure of gender boundaries. Men on an equal basis with women demonstrated glitter dresses, skirts (a characteristic piece from Kronthaler’s native Tyrol), and massive snake-skin platforms, while priestly women wore oversized jackets with bodybuilder-like shoulders. In this way, the catwalk turned into a continuous play of identity exchanges. “Unisex is good for the environment. Couples would not have to buy so many clothes”, - shared her opinion Mrs. Westwood.

The collection was born after a visit from Westwood’s long-time assistant Sharon Lishman who became a Buddhist. Neoromantic corsets with oriental prints, the robes of theatrical volumes - were references to Buddism. Meanwhile, jewelry and oversized jackets were born out of Kronthaler’s inspiration of his mother’s wardrobe from 60’s. In contrast, attracted by renaissance painting of Bruegel “The Peasants Feast”, Kronthaler invented the color range for Sexercise - chromatic palettes of dark shades where mostly red and bordeaux were present.

Of course, a profile of a beloved woman crucially influenced the designer. “I want to thank and to dedicate this collection to all the people who helped and supported me, and my friends who inspire me and especially Vivienne”, - mentioned Kronthaler. For this reason, a playful spirit of punk and silly circus-like overlapping forms are timeless vibes that Kronthaler manifested in Sexercise.
